Another $1 million gift for TNU

from Treveccan magazine

Don and Zelma Waggoner of Greenville, South Carolina, have completed a one-million-dollar gift to Trevecca, the third such gift to the school in recent years.

Dr. Millard Reed made the announcement of this gift at Baccalaureate, May 3, 1996. The Waggoners have given permission for this gift to be used for the new entry to the university and for other campus improvements.

The Waggoners started their own Rental Uniform Service forty-one years ago. During the early years of the company, the Waggoners laundered their uniforms and delivered them personally. The company grew, eventually supplying uniforms to more than a dozen major cities in the South. Recently their company was merged into The Cintas Corporation.

According to their pastors, the Waggoners have been faithful church people. Rev. Kevin Ulmet, their pastor at Greenville First Church of the Nazarene, says: "The Waggoners have been pivotal members of this church for forty-one years—loyally serving as board members, church treasurer, and workers in the bus ministry, visitation, and every other ministry of this church. The present successful ministry of this church is largely the result of the foresight and vision of

Recycling program initiated for the new school year

by Sonya Olson

Recycling on campus should be much more convenient and likely thanks to Tennessee Dorm Resident Director Sarah Burton and Professor of Biology Walt Black. Mrs. Burton is starting a paper recycling program and Professor Black will be overseeing the aluminum can collection program.

Mrs. Burton began researching local recycling companies last summer after observing the need for recycling on campus. The company she chose, Jefferson Smurfit, accepts a wide variety of paper products and supplies [see below] and empties its own 95 gallon containers. Over the summer, Mrs.

Burton gained approval of the President's Cabinet for this project. She also conducted an e-mail survey about recycling among the faculty, staff, and administration. She found them very supportive, "I think they are really excited to see this program coming to the campus so I think the program is going to work," she said.

Currently, three 95-gallon containers have been distributed around campus: at the bottom of the administration building, near the Post Office, and on the lower floor of the Greathouse science building. Mrs. Burton's next step will be to petition SGA for funds to buy 30-gallon trash cans that can be used for the upper levels of buildings. She hopes to eventually expand the program to include cardboard, glass, and plastic.

Walt Black, professor of biology, is overseeing the Cans for Cause project this year. His plan is to have about 30 well-marked receptacles in the gym and on each floor in dormitories and buildings with classrooms. Biology department laboratory assistants will be responsible for emptying the cans. "For the science department it's an ethical thing to do. It's something that we ought to do as a school," he said. Black feels that consistency and commitment will be essential to a successful recycling program.

Volunteers will be needed to empty boxes from faculty and staff offices to take to main bins, to place boxes in offices and computer rooms, and to serve on a recycling committee. Please see Sarah Burton if you are interested in helping with this project. Volunteers will also be welcomed for the cans project. Please see Walt Black if interested.

Rob North: RD with a mission

by Brian Bergstrom

As the new Resident Director for Benson Hall, Rob North has many responsibilities and many students to attend to. So it is not surprising that occasionally he loses something valuable, such as his keys. I caught up with Rob to talk to him about his new position at TNU. After finding his keys, we discussed his new position and what it means to him.

"I really enjoy the Resident Director aspect and the opportunities to work with students," says North, who was an RD for Southern Nazarene University the last two years. "I would like to help students with shaping their values, helping them to make decisions, and to have a closer relationship with God."

Along with his wife Cindy, who was born in Nashville, and their five month old son, Quinn, North wants to become involved with the Trevecca Community and its residents. Rob graduated from Olivet Nazarene University in 1987 as a Communications Major and went into sales for about a year. He then became interested in flying airplanes for the mission field and attended Moody Aviation at Moody Bible Institute from 1989 to 1992. In 1993, while working as a corporate recruiter, he met Cindy. They married and will be celebrating their third anniversary October 9. In the summer of 1994 North volunteered for Nazarene Mission Air in Mazzini, Swaziland, and since then he has served at SNU.

Why did Rob and Cindy come here? "Part of the reason was to be full time into student development, the attraction of the school to us, and the desire to help TNU in missions," Rob explained.

Rob says that he would like to serve the Lord as a pilot-missionary but is satisfied about what he is doing now. "We [Rob and Cindy] are both open to whatever God want for us. [But] we have no expectations of what that will be." Both are very interested in the missions aspect of TNU. Part of the reason they came here is the desire to help TNU grow in the area of missions, both to the inner city and beyond. North was a member of the first ever C.A.U.S.E. trip to Guatemala City in 1986. "C.A.U.S.E. to me is so important," he states.

North has already begun to help TNU students in their spiritual life. Rob has helped to start "accountability groups" for Benson Hall in order for students to rely on each other for strength and encouragement. Meanwhile, Cindy is working on her Master of Arts in Religion and has about 30 more hours to take. She is joining the staff at College Hill Church of the Nazarene and will be working in compassionate ministries there.

Overall, Rob and Cindy have been astounded with the welcome TNU has given them. "We are very thankful for the warm reception from the students and faculty, for the housewarming gifts, and for the help everyone has offered. We are just blown away at the support and we feel at home here."

"We are very glad to be a part of the season of growth for TNU, whether financially, spiritually, or in missions," they said.

Dear Students,

This letter was supposed to be about the SGA retreat that we took a few weeks ago to Virginia. However, as I sat down and began to write, I just knew that wasn't what I wanted to write about. Instead, I have decided to share with you about the vision we have for this campus and what we, as a Student Government, would like to see happen.

What we want to see isn't necessarily a bunch of activities (though we'll have plenty of great ones). We want to see a new kind of community on top of this hill. One that reaches out to others and truly wants to make a difference in lives.

If you attended the SGA chapel you heard me read a passage of Scripture that communicates our vision for this year. That passage is Mark 12:28-34. A teacher asked Jesus which of the commandments is the greatest. Jesus answered him by saying, "The greatest commandment is this: 'Hear O Israel, the Lord your God is one. Love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your mind and with all your strength.' The second is this, 'Love your neighbor as yourself.' There is no commandment greater than these."

I heard a pastor named Bill Hybels say the same thing when he said that we should love God radically and love each other irrationally. Think about it. What could happen on this campus... in this city... or even in this world if we just took those words to heart. I think the world would be a much greater place if we all loved God with everything that is part of us and, in turn, loved each other in a way that is only possible because of our love for God. I truly believe it's possible and I hope it is something that each of us strives for.

So that is my challenge, to myself and to you. I'm praying for us all as we work to build up the community and live in the alternative Kingdom.

Love in Christ,
Jennifer Finch
ASB President

P.S. In case you're wondering, we had a great time getting to know each other on our retreat. We also talked about lots of ways we can get all of you involved! Here are a couple of ways. On September 28 we are hosting a Trevecca Leadership Conference. Look for sign-ups for this fun day of learning how to be a better leader. We want you all there!!! Also, you are always welcome to come to our weekly Monday night meetings. They start at 9:00 PM in JSC 307. Hope to see you there!

Three new professors join TNU faculty for '96-'97 year

by Jenny Shepherd and Jalayne Warren

Freshmen fill the campus each fall feeling like they are the only ones new at Trevecca. Everyone spends time getting to know new faces in their classes, dorms, and meals. However, these new faces are not limited to freshman or transfers but include faculty as well. This year, TNU welcomes three new faculty members to the community: Dr. Sam Stueckle, Professor Amy Holt, and Dr. Jay Zajas.

Dr. Stueckle received his bachelor's degree from Northwest Nazarene College in Idaho in 1980 and his doctorate in 1985 at Clemson University in South Carolina. He went on to work at the University of Idaho for three years, Clemson University for one year, and Northeastern University for seven years. He worked mostly advising graduate students and was heavily involved in research.

Stueckle explains that with the major emphasis placed on publishing, professors had to place their students second in priority. This is not what he wanted. He chose Trevecca because it was the opposite of the research universities. He desired a sense of community where faculty cared about the students and made an effort to be involved in their learning. Dr. Stueckle does not want to only teach math, he wants to "help people learn to become adults in a Christian environment."

Outside the school walls, Dr. Stueckle and his wife of five years, Sharon, were involved in the children's ministries at their church. While they were in Boston, they worked with the local Eastern Nazarene College students to help reach out to the children in public housing. They are both ready to settle down and be a part of a lasting community.

Ms. Amy Holt is also a new face on the Trevecca scene. She is a voice, music history and French diction professor. She received her bachelor's degree in voice and music performance at Bob Jones University in South Carolina and her master's degree in music education at Belmont University. She went on to teach voice at Bob Jones and later music education at Granbery Elementary School in Brentwood. Holt came to Trevecca as an adjunct teacher and is now a full-time faculty member. She has settled in Nashville due to family ties in and around the area. In the past she has sung in operas and professional oratorios. In addition, she accompanied the CAUSE team to Brazil last summer.

When asked for her advice to college students she stated, "Just take care of yourself physically and get enough rest." She feels that any music can be sung to God's glory, regardless of its type.

Looking in the Business and Management Division, one finds a new professor in Dr. Jay Zajas. Learning is a vital part of Dr. Zajas' life. He not only has taught at every level from middle school up to graduate studies, but has devoted the better part of his life to his education. Some of the many schools he has attended and the degrees he has received include: California State University with an M.A. in Humanities, Ethics, and Philosophy; University of Texas with an M.B.A. in Management and Marketing; and Texas State University with an M.A. in Accounting. He is a certified professional manager, personal career counselor, and has been a school principal, school counselor, English teacher, and business teacher.

Publishing is also a significant part of his career. He has published many books ranging from selected essays to the subject of career development success. Further, his articles have been published in such works as the Journal of Customer Service and Marketing Management and the Executive Development Journal.

Trevecca defines itself as an institution for which Christ is the center, and that is what lead Dr. Zajas here. In addition, his only daughter, the eldest

by Kenneth L. Couchman

On August 19, while this year's TNU student body was packing their cars and confirming their airline tickets, the faculty, staff, and administration of Trevecca were gathering for the annual President's Dinner in the Apple Dining Room.

In addition to the food, camaraderie, and organ music by Dr. David Miller, the President's Dinner was the occasion for the presentation of a series of awards.

One of these was the President's Service Award. This award was established by President Millard Reed to honor employees of all classification at the University for special services rendered. The recipients of these awards are chosen by the President.

This year, five individuals received the President's Service Award. They were Eldon Welch, maintenance department; Brian Sims, ITS; Everett Holmes, enrollment services; Joyce Welch, bookstore; and Mark Myers, vice president for financial affairs.

Also presented at the President's Dinner were the 1996 Faculty Member of the Year, Administrator of the Year, and Staff Member of the Year Awards.

The Faculty Member of the Year award was established in 1969 by Trevecca President Mark R. Moore to honor one person who, in the judgment of his or her peers, has made an outstanding contribution to their profession. This year, Dr. Ed Whittington received the award. "[Dr. Whittington] is an excellent classroom teacher and is known by students and colleagues as a compassionate and caring person," said his profile in the dinner program.

The Staff Member of the Year award is awarded each year to a staff member who has rendered especially dedicated service to the College in their respective field. The 1996 recipient of this award was Arnetta Campbell, maintenance secretary. Her profile included the phrase "... [with Arnetta] you will always find a winning smile, compassionate heart, and a hard worker."

Dr. Ed Whittington, Arnetta Campbell, and Art Foster with their President's Awards

The Administrator of the Year award was added in 1983 to honor exemplary service to the University. Business Office Controller Art Foster was presented with the 1996 award. In addition to "music, athletics, church, positive Christian principles, a strong work ethic, long hours, and dedication to the job," the recipient profile noted that Foster "is bringing the accounting office to new heights of professionalism."

"A teacher can change a person's life. . . . But only if the person is ready to be changed." —David Malter in Chaim Potok's The Promise, page 130.

"I pretty much know what I believe."

This was the answer that a student from a different college gave me about two years ago when I asked him whether he was enjoying his philosophy class. He said that he was in the class only because it was required and that he didn't think the class was that important. "Why?" I asked.

Then he gave the answer already mentioned above: "I pretty much know what I believe."

Now, before I go too much further, let me assure you that this column is not about the value of philosophy in a liberal arts education. Instead, this column is about just plain education.

You see, the individual of whom I speak was preventing himself from receiving an education. How? He was blocking himself from an education because he was refusing to examine the beliefs he was taking into the course. He was of the opinion that since "I pretty much know what I believe, that means that I need not reevaluate my perspective on the world or critically examine those things that I already

The Prerequisite to True Education

by Kenneth L. Couchman,
Editor

believe." It is at this exact point that I wish to say "Are you sure?" to him and to anyone of his persuasion, some of whom are reading this column now.

The issue here is about perspective more than it is about Introduction to Philosophy or any other course in the curriculum.

It seems to me that for a student like the one described above, there can be no tangible educational difference between a liberal arts college like Trevecca and any career-training institution. Why? Because students such as the one described above refuse to answer the call to reexamine our beliefs that schools like Trevecca offer. Meanwhile, career-training schools rarely make such a call. In the end, both such schools are nothing more than job training for such an individual.

I think what I am trying to say has been said by our President Millard Reed using different, and probably clearer, language. He has explained that for any conflict resolution to occur among individuals, at least one of those individuals must be of the opinion that "Despite my opinion that I am right, there is a possibility that I am at least a little bit wrong as well as a possibility that this other opinion is at least a little bit right." It is this perspective on the disagreement that provides the occasion for bridges of dialogue and resolution to be constructed.

I say that to say this: I am not of the opinion that "education" is job training. The more appropriate term for that is "job training" (no surprise) and can be received for much less than $252 per hour. Nor am I of the opinion that true education is the attempt to examine what someone else says while refusing to entertain the option that "Even though I pretty much know what I believe, there is a possibility that I might be a little bit wrong and a possibility that this other person might be a little bit right."

Instead, I believe that true education occurs when we weigh differing perspectives against our own and seek to determine which one is truly more correct and less wrong. Then we can say "I pretty much know what I believe, but I'm always eager to refine those beliefs or replace them with better ones."

This is the perspective that I believe all of us should have as we enter our classrooms (whether as students or as teachers), as we enter chapel, or even as we enter relationships. It is the difference between the label of "seeker after truth" and being static, self-proclaimed "standards of truth."

Of course, I might be at least a little bit wrong about all of this. And certainly, your opinion may at least be a little bit right. So let me know if you disagree.

Trevechoes Mission Statement

The Trevechoes newspaper arises from and exists for the student body of Trevecca Nazarene University. Its mission is first "to provide accurate objective comprehensive coverage of news events of interest to the members of the Trevecca community; [second to provide] interpretive and constructive commentary on events, issues, ideas, institutions, and policies;"* third to serve as a record of the life and thought of Trevecca; fourth to provide a forum for students (though faculty are not excluded) to explore issues and ideas on their own; and fifth to provide a medium through which dialogue about any of these may occur.

*quoted from Constitution of the Associated Student Body of Trevecca Nazarene [University]; Revised 93-94; Article VII, Section 10, point B.

Freshman Survival Manual

Trevechoes' supplement to the Intro to College Life textbook

by Jason Adkins

"A man who has never gone to school may steal from a freight car; but if he has a university education, he may steal the whole railroad."—Theodore Roosevelt

I have been called upon to write an abridged Freshmen Survival Manual, and first, I'd like to talk about the thing with which you were most concerned when first you set foot on campus:

Relationships

It is a singular joy to arrive here free from all the class structures of high school—if you were un-cool, no one here knows it. Here's what that means for the guys: you can go up to the most desirable girl you see and ask her out just like you're carrying on a dating-the-best-girl-in-high-school tradition. You could be James Bond, James Dean, or James Earl Jones if you want and no one will know that you haven't always been. I'm really not saying that you can and should be someone else; I'm saying that you can be yourself and not hang wriggling from the peg you got stuck on in the eighth grade when you had really bad hair and tight-rolled your acid-washed jeans. Be confident about being yourself—if she doesn't like it, she will make you miserable.

"Find a casual friend who has approximate tastes in music, waking hours, and talk shows and opposite tastes in clothes and those of the opposite sex."

The game is a bit different for the ladies. Generally, guys like a challenge, so make sure that whomever you're after knows that you're around and that you aren't terribly concerned that he is. However, be sensitive to the poor in confidence or the fragile of self-image, for this breed tires quickly of chasing. I'm not encouraging anyone to be an Ice-Princess, but you would do well to take the Clint Eastwood approach as opposed to the wrestler's approach. A wrestler will grab you and hang on until (and probably after) you're tired of being in his presence whereas Clint will just knock you out and walk away. Since brevity is the soul of wit, roll all your strength and sweetness into a span and dazzle him with all the charm and interest that you would have spread thinly over an hour of conversation—then walk away. This is blitzkrieg strategy as opposed to a battle of attrition. Wrestle with God; with men you must box.

As for roommate relationships, always be more courteous and more careful than necessary (i.e., don't go borrowing clothes, food, car, significant others, etc., without asking). When your roommate goes to bed, turn off the White Zombie and/or Jerry Springer and use one light. Remember, anything that you could imagine being slightly annoying if done to you will probably be perceived by your roomie as a deliberate attempt to bother her/him when nerves are frazzled.

It's probably too late for this, but for future reference... best friends generally don't make best roommates. Find a casual friend who has approximate tastes in music, waking hours, and talk shows and opposite tastes in clothes and those of the opposite sex.

You may be tempted, especially if you have a relationship back home, to seclude yourself like a bear in winter inside your concrete cave singing Simon and Garfunkle's "I Am a Rock." If you are among these fearful and somehow got out to get this paper, remember that everyone is in your situation and no one is going to take the time to be as critically conscious of you but you. Screw your courage to the sticking point and take a dive off your little cliff. You'll be in the water and swimming in the blink of an eye.

Money $$$

Don't get a tattoo precipitately. Those things stay on a long time.

Don't get a credit card. If you do, don't use it. If you do use it, understand that you are asking for whatever financial ruin you will almost certainly bring on yourself. If you're enamored with the look of shiny plastic, get a check card.

Sleep

You will quickly find that the only thing more rare than a parking spot or fresh food is sleep. "Sleep that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care..." / Balm of hurt minds," etc., and you too will come to wax eloquent at the naming of that sweet and rare occupation. With a little brains and a lot of Mapco cappuccino, however, you can survive on a small stipend of sleep. Studies have shown that almost everyone can live functional lives on six and a half hours of sleep if handled correctly. The most important element is consistency. Your body plans periods of REM sleep throughout the night that will be thrown off if you get up for a 7:30 class on Monday and sleep in until 12:00 on Tuesday. Plan, for example, to sleep from 12:30 to 7:00 every day and you'll find yourself with more time and not feeling like a research and development lab rat for Vivarin. The second most important thing to remember is that you must cut your sleep back slowly—about fifteen minutes a night. You'll feel like a rented mule for about two weeks and then it should level off for you.

Devotional Time

If you neglect this next discipline, it will not cause you to fail a single class, miss a moment of sleep, or cut one hour into your social life, but all these will be thoroughly empty without it. Schedule time with God and guard it zealously—like He was more important than your girlfriend, boyfriend, grades, religion, sleep, friends or whatever will most certainly encroach on that time. You may be ardently in love with Jesus now and think yourself beyond such a warning, but if you're not careful you will look in the mirror a year or two down the road with a gnawing emptiness or some sin that has become bigger than you and wonder, "What happened? How did I get here?" Don't become a casualty of busy-ness. Your life joined into the vine is the most slippery and most vital aspect (more than an aspect, I think) of existence, so guard it with all diligence.

Nashville

Nashville has been called the Athens of the South and also "a big small town," and aptly so because the Nash is the most intellectual and entertaining city in the South. If you're the artsy type, listen to WPLN (90.3) at 8:00 in the morning for area events or call 862-5809 for the same. If you're the Eddie Bauer type, there are state parks in every direction, and you can ask a local where to find Radnor Lake, Edwin Warner, and Percy Warner parks. These will be an abiding joy to your tree-hugging heart (of whom I number myself). If you're the Garth Brooks type, welcome to paradise.

Throw yourself into this experience because you will get out only what you expend of love, dedication, and excellence toward your spiritual, intellectual, and social education. As Thoreau said, "In the long run men hit only what they aim at. Therefore, though they should fail immediately, they had better aim at something high."

Coaches share thoughts on fall seasons

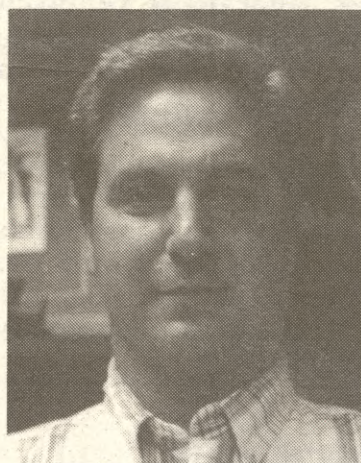

By Buzz Sheridan

Coach Kimlyn Sparks

Coach Julie Van Beek

Coach Sam Harris

Trevecca's intercollegiate sports program has a newer, stronger, and more diverse look this year. Last spring, Ryan Gray was hired as the new baseball coach (see May 1 Trevechoes). Over the summer, Julie Van Beek was hired as head coach for Trevecca's new women's basketball team. In addition, Kimlyn Sparks is now serving as Trevecca's interim women's volleyball coach, allowing Coach Renae Kirkhart to focus exclusively on women's softball.

Volleyball Coach Kimlyn Sparks is a former TNU staff member and a current member of the counseling staff of Vanderbilt University.

Trevechoes: What attracted you to come back to TNU?

Sparks: I've always had a heart for TNU and want to build a strong team. The potential is here.

How do you feel about the season?

I'm really excited about it. I'm very surprised at the level of play at this point. [The players are] highly motivated, very into trying to do well and everything I have requested. I'm looking for a .500 record for this year.

It just depends how we gel and how the season goes.

How tough is the schedule?

Kim: We're in a different league this year. The TSAC has split into three divisions. We're on the West side, with a team from Arkansas and one from Kentucky.

Julie Van Beek graduated from Northwest Nazarene College in 1989. She comes to Trevecca from Southern Nazarene University, where she was assistant women's basketball coach for four years.

Trevechoes: What tournament experience have you had?

Van Beek: We went to the national tournament all four years I was there. The first year we lost in the semi-finals and the last three years we won the national championship.

What do you think it takes to get to that level?

First it takes good athletes; kids who understand what it takes to win—a good work ethic and the mental attitude that they refuse to lose. Once they get into the games they will expect to win. In tight situations they are going to fight tooth and nail because they don't want to lose. Part of that comes from success. The more success you have the more you know how to win. That's why in recruiting I want to recruit kids that are not only athletic, but also are from winning programs and are good students.

What gave you the motivation to start TNU's program?

A lot of it was that it was in Tennessee. Tennessee and Oklahoma are the best states in the nation for women's basketball. I also liked the fact that TNU is a Nazarene school.

How do you feel about this season?

I'm excited because it's a brand new start. I know it's a dream for the administration and it's a dream for me. I can look back in the last three months and be amazed already. Three months ago I didn't have anything. Now I have a team of 12 girls, uniforms, and balls. It's a great sense of accomplishment. It's like when you build a house—this first year is a great time to build a solid foundation.

How tough do you think the conference is going to be?

The conference is incredibly tough. Lipscomb and Union were in the final four. Lipscomb has been in the final four the last three years. We are going to be competing against the finest teams in the nation. By the same token, I think that's great. It will help our recruiting.

Do you have a timetable set for being able to have a winning program?

That's hard to say. If we do things right, hopefully by the fourth season we will be competing for one of the top spots in the conference. It's hard to say because I don't know about the other teams.

This fall is the beginning of Sam Harris's fourth year as men's head basketball coach.

Trevechoes: How do you feel about the new players?

Harris: We think we have made ourselves better than we were last year. Time will tell because we have not put anything in yet. We are just running the track.

What holes did you fill?

I think one of our weaknesses in game situations has been that we've had a hard time getting defensive rebounds and defending the post in close games. I think we have made ourselves stronger in that area with two post players. We get Jason Watkins back for a whole year.

What is the challenge to get done

Drama Review: Julius Caesar

by Robin Hess

Students returning to school in late August found a "welcome back" treat in Nashville's Centennial Park with performances of Julius Caesar by the Mockingbird Public Theater as a part of the Nashville Shakespeare Festival.

The play is one of Shakespeare's most well known and loved works. Julius Caesar is a tragic drama of the murder of one of the greatest military and political leaders of the Western world and the deep emotional and psychological turmoil associated with his death.

Caesar, played by Brian Mathis, returned home after a mighty military victory and three times refused the crown of Rome offered to him by Mark Antony, played by Gary Lowery. Cassius, wonderfully played by Denice Hicks, became greatly upset by the prospect that Rome should fall under the power of one man and convinced Brutus, portrayed by Mikael Byrd, to join forces with her to eliminate this threat to Rome. Shakespeare's focus upon Brutus's seduction into the betrayal of his friend and his reaction to the wrath of Rome's people as they turn against him paints Brutus as a man with many levels—much more than the low-level traitor of some history books.

The play itself was well presented in a contemporary, high-technology setting. Visually explosive, the huge overhead video screen provided live-action crowd shots not unlike those of the recent political conventions. These televised portions of the drama made the play both multidimensional and larger than life. The lighting and sound, as far as I could tell, were exceptional for an outdoor production. The scene changes were smooth and well orchestrated. I was impressed by the overall effect of the play.

It is interesting to consider what message this play, especially in its contemporary setting, can give the audience about the very nature of politics in an election year. One would be guilty of neglect if one were to fail to compare the production to the much publicized political conventions.

It was not only the high-tech presentation that held rich political reminders for this late twentieth century audience. The play also contained numerous truths about the structures of politics today and "the nature of the beast." For instance, the nineties have shown the increasing interest and role of women in government. The daring and bold decision on the part of the director to cast Cassius as a strong woman reflects this trend.

Another example of a timeless truth can be seen in the plot itself. The idea one person controlling all power over a country is one that still strikes fear in the hearts of many. Further, almost anyone who really spends time watching those in power will note that the great men are not always as perfect as they seem to be. Brutus is seen by many of the other characters in the play as the pillar of old Roman society's fight for liberty and justice, yet it is he easily flattered and seduced by others.

Trevecca was well represented in this drama. Two of Trevecca's star communications students, Brian Niece and Stacy Schnarr were cast in the production. Niece showed a great deal of flexibility in his performance of several minor roles. Stacey did a wonderful job of operating the video camera.

Music Review: Charlie Peacock's strangelanguage

Charlie Peacock
strangelanguage re:think reviewed by Shaun Fitzpatrick

It's a new era in the career of Mr. Peacock. A new album, a new sound, and a new record label (his own in fact). Keyboard programming is a key factor on this record as a very synthesized European sound emerges. What makes this album great is that he has not compromised his trademark Peacock-esque sound. He's just molded and shaped it until a new, fresh, and progressive sound has taken place around the old style. Some songs may radically turn listeners' ears with all the keyboard effects, but other tunes, such as "Lady Soul" and "Rocket" will please classic fans.

The album title speaks metaphorically about what God's word is to the normal, worldly culture.

The language of God is strange compared to human language, and the songs on this album reflect that with lyrics like "there's no cancer like ambition/ there's no cure like crucifixion" and "watch my brother swallow the bitter pill/... but if you thought that pill was bitter wait till you see the side effects."

Overall, a renewed energy is felt from Charlie on this album. It is an energy that was lacking in his last release, possibly due to the lack of success with previous albums. This is a good start for his re:think label and I'm excited to see what the future of this company holds.

"When Mac & Cheese was an Entree"

When Mac and Cheese was an entree, I am sure you've had a day like this one. It made me think that pre-registering could actually be a lot of fun.

Let's see, it started off easy, but how was I to know? When one changes their major, and the schedule does you no favor, your temper will begin to grow.

"They seem to have it in for me," my mind began to wonder..... "The school is full of conspirators, and I have exposed their blunder!"

And in my mind I began to think: "Dear Lord, why do I deserve this?" How quick I was to remind him, of all my deeds of service.

But travesty, such travesty! I was told at lunch with my tray, that you can have pizza, but you can't have both, because Mac and Cheese was an entree.

So sitting in my room at night, I gave thanks to Jesus Christ my Lord. That an entree that does not appeal to my appetite, was possible for me to afford.

in practice before the first game?

We've got to get into shape. We've got to work hard in conditioning so that we can learn once practice starts in a week. It's really hard to concentrate when you're tired, so we need to get into good enough shape so that the players can hear what we are saying and do it regularly.

Do you think you will have better depth?

Yes. One of the things we have always tried to do is to play with 10 or 11 people. With the new players, I think we can give the starters a break earlier in the year so we can save them a little for conference play. We're looking forward to having that added depth and strength.

Do you have some good leadership on the team?

Yes. The team is lead by four seniors and three juniors. We're getting to a point now where the returning players need to lead by example on and off the floor. The players need to be held to an accountability factor this year. Leadership is something that the players have to earn among themselves. I think it's important that the right people stand up in order to lead. I think we are one recruiting class away from where we want to be. I think at this point we can be optimistic about the season.

of his four children, is a Trevecca student. His decision to come here was also influenced by her. Dr. Zajas finds the ability to share his faith to be a key to teaching and guiding his students. He feels "You don't go into education today if you don't have a servant's heart."

Amid all the new things for students to experience in Nashville and all the new friends to meet, these new professors illustrate that the people at the chalkboard also bring their own contribution to Trevecca and are certainly people worth getting to know.
